Kevin Lager is an Extension Associate with the Texas AgriLife Extension Service and based in Canyon, TX at West Texas A&M University. Prior to joining the organization Lager acquired working knowledge of the dairy industry through his service on dairy operations ranging in size from the small family operation to the large commercial dairy. During those years he gained experience in nutritional and reproductive management as well as herd health and employee management.

Lager works both individually and as a team member in addressing industry needs through individual contact or through field days and seminars along with disseminating results of applicable research. His areas of focus include nutrition and management to improve dairy productivity. He maintains close communication with the Texas dairy industry through cooperatives and individual producers and is a member of the American Dairy Science Association.
